Case No. 3:25-cv-01885-VC

Dear Mr. Gray, Mr. Sethi, Mr. Ripley, and Mr. Powell,

Allow me to begin—not with legal arguments or strategic positions—but with a personal reflection offered in sincerity.

Never did I imagine that someone as ordinary and unremarkable as myself would one day find occasion to formally address the leadership of a company stewarding tens of billions in global assets. (Even though I have previously sent several emails.)

Looking back at the arc of my life, many things I once longed for never came to be—while many of the moments that did arrive were ones I had never anticipated. So too is today: an unexpected convergence, quietly scripted by fate.

Now, to return to the heart of the matter:

At the outset of this case, I extended a 60-day grace period on my own initiative, and, at what I believed was a constructive moment, put forward a resolution window supported by a clear and deliberate structural framework. Regrettably, your side did not respond in kind, nor take the opportunity to recalibrate. Instead, key junctures were bypassed, and a strategic silence allowed time to slip past—That, I must say, is a matter of genuine regret.

Sincerely
Lianlian Porth
